Overview

What is a TNO planet?

TNOs are ancient planetoids that orbit the Sun in the distant, frigid regions of the solar system. These objects are remnants of the planetesimal disk, the primordial material from which the solar system formed over 4.5 billion years ago. Their small size, extreme distance, and low brightness have made them difficult to study—until now.

What are trans-Neptunian objects (TNOs)?

Hidden beyond Neptune and Pluto lie the Trans-Neptunian Objects (TNOs)—icy, dark planetoids that provide a window into the early history of the solar system. Recent observations by the James Webb Space Telescope (JWST) have revolutionized our understanding of these.

What spectral groups do TNOs have?

JWST's observations revealed three distinct spectral groups among TNOs. Double-dip TNOs have significant amounts of carbon dioxide ice. Cliff-type TNOs are rich in nitrogen and complex organic molecules, giving them a reddish hue. Bowl-type TNOs, on the other hand, are dark and dusty, dominated by water ice.
